The Best Day to Fly Cheap with Frontier Airlines

When it comes to saving money on airfare, timing is everything. For Frontier Airlines, Tuesdays and Wednesdays are typically the cheapest days to fly. Here's why:

1. Lower Demand Midweek

Most people prefer flying on weekends or at the beginning or end of the week due to work and school schedules. That means Tuesday and Wednesday flights are less in demand, and Frontier lowers fares to fill up the plane.

2. Frontier's Dynamic Pricing

Frontier uses a dynamic pricing model, meaning prices fluctuate based on supply and demand. If a Tuesday or Wednesday flight has many empty seats, the fare drops to encourage bookings. That's good news for flexible travelers.

3. Sales Are Often Valid for Midweek Travel

Many of Frontier's flash sales or discount codes apply specifically to Tuesday and Wednesday travel. Check their website frequently or call +1-888-342-6040 to inquire about current deals.

When Should You Book Frontier Flights?

Flying on the cheapest day is only part of the savings formula — knowing when to book also helps. Here's a quick timeline guide:

- Best Booking Window: 1 to 3 months in advance for domestic flights.
- Cheapest Days to Book: Generally, Tuesday afternoons and Wednesday mornings see the most price drops.
- Avoid Booking: During holidays or peak travel months like June, July, and December — unless there's a specific promotion.

If you're unsure when to book for your specific route, a quick call to Frontier Airlines support at +1-888-342-6040 can help you compare options and even book over the phone.

How to Find Frontier's Lowest Fares

Besides flying on Tuesdays or Wednesdays, try these methods to score the lowest fares:

1. Use the "Low Fare Calendar"

Frontier's website has a Low Fare Calendar tool that shows you the cheapest fares across different days and months. It's ideal for travelers with flexible schedules.

2. Sign Up for Frontier's Discount Den

Frontier offers a membership program called Discount Den, which provides access to exclusive fares and family discounts. The membership pays for itself after just a couple of trips.

3. Book Directly with Frontier

Booking through third-party travel websites might not always show Frontier's cheapest fares. It's best to book directly at flyfrontier.com, or call +1-888-342-6040 to confirm if you're getting the best rate.

4. Avoid Add-ons (or Plan Ahead)

Frontier keeps fares low by offering basic tickets, and then charges for extras like seat selection, carry-ons, and checked luggage. Plan accordingly:

- Travel light to avoid baggage fees.
- Choose a seat at check-in instead of paying extra.

Is It Really Worth Flying Midweek?

You might be wondering if flying on Tuesday or Wednesday is worth the trade-off. The answer depends on your priorities.

Pros of Midweek Travel:

- Lower Fares: Often $20–$100 cheaper than weekend flights.
- Less Crowded Flights: More seating flexibility.
- Faster Check-ins and Security Lines: Airports are quieter on weekdays.

Cons:

- Limited Flight Options: Some routes only operate on certain days.
- Time Off Work or School: Not ideal for every schedule.

If you're unsure whether a midweek flight is available for your preferred route, call Frontier at +1-888-342-6040 to get exact schedules and pricing.

Other Days to Consider for Cheap Flights

While Tuesday and Wednesday are statistically the cheapest, here's how other days typically rank:

- Monday: Sometimes low-priced, especially early morning flights.
- Thursday: Can be affordable, especially for return trips.
- Friday to Sunday: Prices are generally highest due to leisure and business travel.

A quick tip: Set price alerts or monitor fares regularly if you're traveling on weekends.

Frontier frequently runs limited-time sales, often on Tuesdays or Wednesdays, offering one-way fares as low as $19 or $29. These sales usually come with restrictions (e.g., must travel on certain dates), but they're a great way to grab a deal.
